Healthy Eyesight Helps Maintain Independence for Life

Being able to see means being able to do, however, good eyesight is increasingly under threat from several factors. Devices like smart phones and ipads proliferate seemingly every day. These many gadgets, while increasingly useful, place additional stress on the eyes.

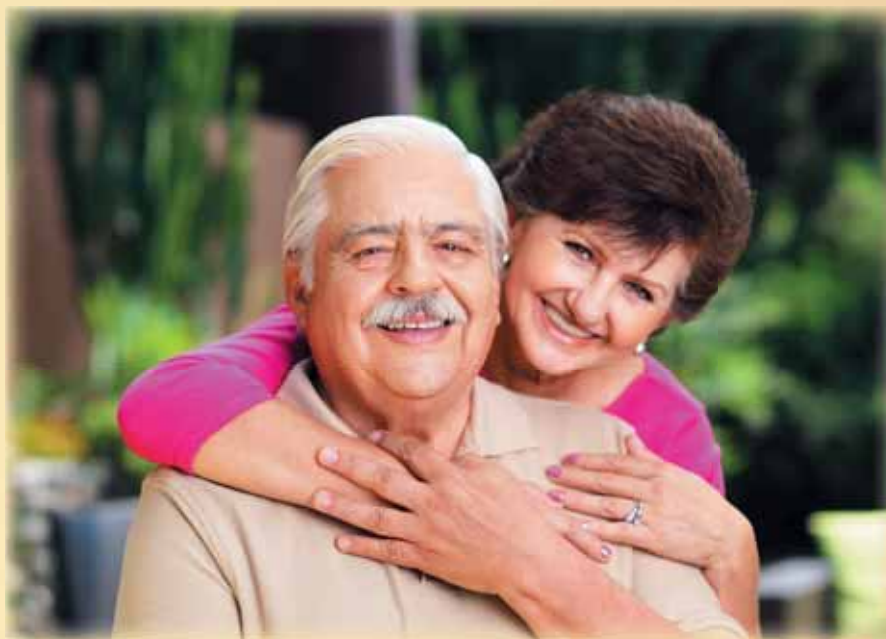

Aging is another stressor for eyesight. As one ages, vision problems may gradually destroy sharp, central vision that is needed to see objects clearly and for common daily tasks such as reading and driving. Many elderly folks lose their independence as they lose the ability to see clearly in certain situations.

Although vision problems can occur during middle age, studies show people over 60 years of age are at the greatest risk. With millions of Baby Boomers turning 60 in the next few years, age-related vision problems are adding to the list of growing concerns.

The need for vision health nutrition is growing rapidly because many conditions of eye health may only be avoided by proper diets rich in vital eye support ingredients or supplementation of these ingredients. Lutein and zeaxanthin are at the forefront for vision health ingredients.*

- Lutein historically has been used to support good eye health. It is a carotenoid that is concentrated in the retina of the eye. It helps the retina and macular area function properly, and helps the eye process blue light. Lutein cannot be produced by the human body, but it can be found in a number of fruits and vegetables.

Nutritional supplementation plays a big role in eye health. Research shows that lutein deficiencies in youth can lead to faltering vision in older age. Hence, early supplementation of lutein is essential.

People may need to get 10 mg to 15 mg of lutein daily to keep their eyes healthy, and most people just aren't getting enough.*

- Zeaxanthin also is a carotenoid that is found in the retina. It protects the eye by absorbing blue light that can cause oxidative stress. While the body cannot produce zeaxanthin, it can be obtained by a number of food sources such as orange peppers, zucchini, celery, sweet potatoes and tangerines.

Unfortunately, many Western diets are low in both lutein and zeaxanthin, and while there is no recommended daily intake for lutein and zeaxanthin, studies show there is benefit in supplementing with them daily.*

Advanced Vision Formula

Most people experience vision loss with advancing age. However, the right nutrients may increase chances of beating vision loss. All of the essential eye-health nutrients listed below are in Vision Power. *

Lutein 15 mg

Important nutrient for a healthy retina and macula. *

Zeaxanthin 1110 mcg

This powerful carotenoid may help protect the lens of the eye from years of exposure to oxygen and light. *

Bilberry 321 mg

Bilberry may help improve night vision and ease eye strain, nourish eye tissue and support healthy circulation in the eye. *

Schisandra berry 240 mg

May help eyes adapt to the dark and reduce incidence of tired, inflamed eyes. *

Ginkgo biloba 80 mg

A strong antioxidant that may promote healthy blood circulation to the eyes. *

Carrot root powder 390 mg

Rich in natural carotenoids that may help fight free radicals that cause eye damage. *

Eyebright 90 mg

Folk tradition used for centuries to possibly help eye strain, relieve runny, sore, itchy eyes. *

L-Glycine 90 mg

May help support healthy lenses by eliminating excess sugars in the eye. *

Lycopene 4 mg

A potent carotenoid antioxidant, lycopene may be effective in protecting the eyes from free radicals. Low levels of lycopene correlate with a higher risk of macular degeneration. *

Alpha lipoic acid 60 mg

This “Universal Antioxidant” shows promise to regenerate other antioxidants that may help protect the eyes. *

Quercetin 300 mg

Nutritional support that may protect eyes from harmful UV radiation. *

Carotenoids 2,250 I.U. of Vitamin. A. (from D. salina, natural source of beta-carotenoids) May help promote night vision, keep macular tissue healthy. *

N-acetylcysteine 250 mg

Possible immune system support antioxidant that filters out UV light. *

L-taurine 750 mg

Possible support to help strengthen retina cells, shield the lens against oxidation and protect the eyes from harmful UV light. *

Vitamin C 75 mg

Studies suggest vitamin C may help delay age-related macular degeneration. *

Triphala complex

150 mg

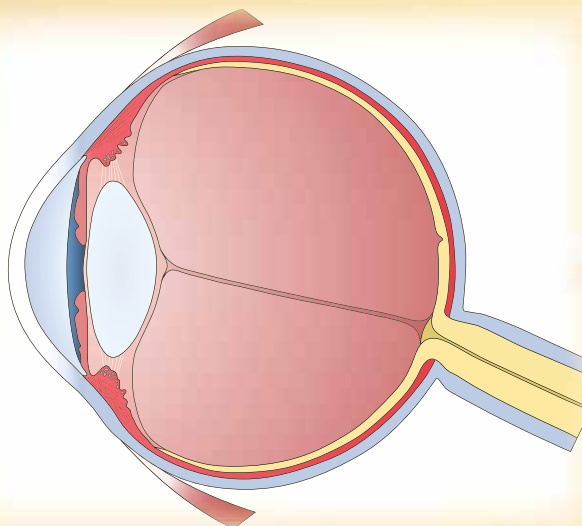

Widely used to improve eye health. *

L-glutathione 10 mg

The primary antioxidant of the eye’s lens that may help protect against oxidative damage. *

Spinach, kale, tomato, broccoli 1115 mg

Whole food eye-health blend providing nature’s source of eye nutrients including carotenoids. *

These Nutrients May Save Sight*

Study: Lutein, Zeaxanthin Improve Vision

A study published in the Journal of Optometry suggests that supplementation with zeaxanthin and lutein may help improve vision and protect the eyes.

Individuals older than 55 years of age have an increased risk of developing age-related vision problems marked by decreased visual acuity at night, blind spots, color degradation and problems reading in low light. *

But Stuart Richer, PhD, OD, at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Chicago, suggests zeaxanthin may help prevent loss of sight and reverse sight problems by restoring this vital pigment in the retina macula. Participants in the study took lutein, zeaxanthin or a combination of both over the course of a year and many experienced improved vision.

Zeaxanthin and lutein occur in the back of the eye. Zeaxanthin in particular protects the cones of the eye, also known as photoreceptors, that are responsible for maintaining central vision, color perception and fine detail. This powerful nutrient occurs naturally in various fruits and vegetables, but the average American does not ingest enough of it to acquire optimal amounts in the eye.

Supplementing with zeaxanthin and lutein may ensure individuals are protecting their vision. *
